From Believer to Harvester

I think the desire to win souls began when I got saved as a teenager. Later it seemed to feel more like a task or an obligation, that I was never able to achieve. I wasn't around anyone who was doing it so I assumed that it must be something most practical Christians don't take seriously. Finally as an adult I decided to take some Lay counseling and evangelism training. This helped me to build confidence and memorize a few verses of Scripture.

Over the years I have found that by simply reading the Bible and praying, God continually gives me more desire and power to speak with people on a daily bases. I have had some great opportunities to be around some very strong Christians who have taught me to live out my faith wherever I happen to be. One man is a street evangelist who's motto is, "Evangelism is more caught than taught." I agree!

I've really enjoyed the past few years because it seems to have moved from a method, to a natural extension of what God is currently doing in me. Often times I'm able to share a Scripture or something I just prayed about that morning. I'm also enjoying how the most unassuming people can in the end, minister to me.

Making disciples is something Jesus is a passionate about! If He is living in us it should never feel like a burden; maybe unnatural at times, but its completely natural to Him. The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life, and he who wins souls is wise (Proverbs 11:30). - John Swaim
